Amenity-Rich Workspaces

Just how important are amenities to the average employee? The answer can mean the difference between an engaged employee and an unmotivated one just counting the minutes until they leave for the day.

We've all seen office spaces in Silicon Valley with slides, ping pong tables, and craft beer on tap. These have their place in the right corporate culture, but how can business owners assess which amenities matter most and strike a balance between making work a place people want to be while remaining productive?

Recent article, Office Amenities: Making the Right Decision for Your Workspace, suggests 4 aspects to consider:

1. Survey employees to find out what amenities are important to them
2. Invest in amenities that promote well-being
3. Amenities that promote work/life balance enhances company culture
4. Research the local area to see which amenities are close by

Preferred Office Network member centers have some fantastic amenities and pride themselves on combining business-minded workspaces with well-planned amenities that capture the local culture.

One of our member centers on 40 Wall Street in New York City, is renovating and expanding their space to include additional workspace and unique amenities including a library/quiet workspace, a yoga studio, a nap room, and a wellness and mother's room, and their new reception area will be able to host events for up to 100 people.

For information on available workspace in your market of choice, try our quick and simple search tool. The center descriptions and images include the amenities available at each center, so you can find the perfect fit for your business.
