Preferred Office Network, North America's Largest and Most Established Network of Flexible Workspaces, Announces New Offerings of Serviced Suites for Growing Businesses

PON Continues Expanding its Coworking Reach, Now in 667 Locations with 163 Members across North America

WASHINGTON – Preferred Office Network, the nation's largest network of flexible workspace, today announced a new offering for companies looking for the ease and flexibility traditionally offered in co-working but that need larger space of their own to accommodate a growing footprint. Established well before the latest coworking boom, PON has created a nation-wide office suites team positioned to take the hassle out of building out an office, delivering companies with concierge-level support and customizable services for their own office space.

PON has connected over two hundred Fortune 1000 clients to over 600 member locations through enterprise deals across North America. In addition to meeting these enterprise needs with no term contracts in member spaces, the PON team will support its member operators across North America by now providing custom space options for businesses looking to expand equipped with all the best-in-class business services companies need.

The new offerings are full service, including space procurement, design and furnishings, IT infrastructure, and even relocation support. PON is now able to support companies every step of the way.

“We’ve been in the coworking industry since before it had a name, so we’ve seen trends come and go. One thing that’s consistent is that as companies have greater success during their time at shared office spaces, they effectively outgrow them, requiring custom office suites. Many times there are companies with a business model or operating structure that are best supported through coworking but their space requirement is simply not a good fit,” said Morgan Neff, Vice President of Business Development of PON.

With prior experience working with clients like Netflix, Dropbox and the London Stock Exchange on custom office requirements, PON has seen how companies benefit from the convenience of this full service approach.

“There’s a hunger for these types of services. When a company either gets too big for coworking or was too big to begin with, they don’t want to start from scratch looking for office space. We can often move them into an office suite within the same building as a coworking provider, taking advantage of our built-in IT infrastructure, concierge services and amenities,” Neff said.

With 621 locations across 293 cities in the U.S. alone, PON offers the largest flexible workspace network nationwide. Brands such as Convene, Novel, Serendipity Labs, Office Evolution, Premier Workspaces, Carr Workplaces, and well over one hundred others help account for over 7.9 million square feet of office space across the United States, Canada and Mexico. While some flexible office space companies have grown frenetically, PON has made it a point to focus on the bottom line by only taking on coworking providers that are financially sound.
